paraphrased text hereThe game of describing appearance, where one student at the front describes another, is an entertaining way to practice vocabulary and introduce description words to students. To make it more challenging, the student can ask questions to figure out who is being described. The teacher draws a person on the board based on the descriptions given by the students.###ARTICLEthink I am Beauty attracts the eye but personality captures the heart Nearly all men can stand interview speaking exercise PDF Personality adjectives dictation and other exercises This is my favourite all-purpose and sustainable it never gets old and can be repeated endlessly you just need new vocabulary This ESL vocabulary exercise teaches students about different types of personalities, such as positive or negative traits, and how to identify them. The activity can be used for various class sizes and is suitable for both beginners and advanced learners. It helps introduce new vocabulary and assesses students' understanding of character adjectives.###ARTICLELooking at the descriptions and pictures, students assess which description fits each picture and why. They consider both appearance and overall impressions to make their decisions. After grouping their ideas, the correct answers are revealed. This activity helps with vocabulary and speaking skills, specifically asking and answering questions about personality traits. Students start by making a list of questions they need to ask, such as "Do you like trying new things?" They then go around the class, asking and answering these questions, and completing the worksheet with classmates' answers. When a classmate says yes to a question, the student writes down their name and asks them to give an example. Afterward, students read each other's sentences aloud to find pairs who show opposite characteristics. If two students think their sentences match, they sit together until everyone has found a partner. The teacher reviews the sentences, checking for correct matches and eliciting matching character adjectives. Alternatively, in groups, students play a game where one student describes a personality adjective without saying the word or using underlined words on the card. The other group members try to guess the adjective. This game helps define and guess adjectives related to personality. Students with the most correct guesses win the cards. If no one correctly guesses an adjective, the student who described it keeps the card. Another activity is sentence completion where students practice character adjectives without using the word in their sentences. They then read their sentences aloud, finding a partner with the opposite characteristic. The teacher reviews and checks for correct matches, revealing matching character adjectives along the way. The ESL Personality Traits Activity, Vocabulary and Speaking: Asking and Answering Questions, Providing Vocabulary, Freer Practice is an effective tool for teaching personality traits. Students practice asking and answering questions about personality traits, improving their vocabulary and speaking skills. The activity helps students learn to describe characters without using specific words, making it a valuable resource for teachers.
