Most plurals in the English language are formed by simply adding -s or -es as a suffix to the singular word. Words that follow a standard or well established pattern are referred to as regular. Words that deviate from these established norms are referred to as irregular. The worksheet collection found below will help students learn the use and function of plural nouns. Most nouns are made plural by simply adding an -s or -es to the ending. Nouns that differ from this formation are considered irregular. The most common irregular plurals end in -ves: knives, wolves, elves. Using these new spelling practices takes work. You need to put a decent level of effort in to master them. These worksheets will provide students the opportunity to get after the plurals and use the irregular spellings frequently. Moonlight Spelling - Find the answer to the moon riddle. What Are Irregular Plural Nouns? Irregular plural nouns are words that do not follow the rules of regular plural nouns. Regular plural nouns add -s, -es, or -ies to the end of nouns to indicate there is more than one. Any noun that does not change its spelling in such a way is classified as an irregular plural noun. One of the reasons for these irregular plural nouns is that many of these words originate from other languages such as Old English, French, Latin, Greek, and Arabic. Therefore they follow the pluralization rules of those languages. This characteristic of irregular plural nouns makes them challenging to teach and learn. As no strict rules explain how these words are pluralized, memorization is the only way to know them. Specific nouns can be grouped under generalized rules, but there are exceptions for each one. These broad categories are explained below. Nouns That End With -f or -fe For nouns that end in -f, the f is converted to a v, and -es is added to the end. Examples are given in the table below. Singular Plural calf calves leaf leaves shelf shelves loaf loaves If the noun ends in -fe, the f is converted to a v, and -s is added to the end. Examples are given in the table below. Singular Plural knife knives life lives wife wives Examples of exceptions: roof (plural: roofs) and proof (plural: proofs). Nouns That End With -o Words that end in -o are usually pluralized by adding -es. Examples are given in the table below. Singular Plural tomato tomatoes potato potatoes hero heroes veto vetoes Exceptions to this are words that are taken from other languages, such as piano (plural: piano), photo (plural: photos), and cello (plural: cellos). Nouns that End With -is English words that end with is are made plural by changing the -is to -es. Examples are given in the table below. Singular Plural diagnosis diagnoses analysis analyses thesis theses antithesis antitheses basis bases Nouns That End With -us In such words, the -us at the end is changed to an -i. Examples are given in the table below. Singular Plural cactus cacti nucleus nuclei octopus octopi focus foci fungus fungi Nouns That End With -os In nouns that end in -os, these letters are replaced with -a. Examples are given in the table below. Singular Plural criterion criteria phenomenon phenomena Nouns That End With -um Words that end in -um are pluralized by replacing these two letters with -a. Examples are given in the table below. Singular Plural bacterium bacteria datum data memorandum memoranda stratum strata curriculum curricula medium media ovum ova Nouns That End With -ix There are two ways to pluralize nouns that end in -ix. Either -es is added to the end, or the x is replaced by a c changing the ending to -ices. Some words have accepted versions of both spellings, while others only have one accepted version. Singular Plural appendix appendices or appendices vortex vortexes or vortexes index indexes or indices codex codices axis axes matrix matrices Nouns Where Vowels Change Several nouns change vowels when pluralized. For example, oo becomes ee, or an becomes en. Singular Plural tooth teeth goose geese man men woman women Some Change Completely Certain irregular nouns change their spelling completely when made plural. Singular Plural mouse mice louse lice die dice ox oxen person people child children opus opera They That Do Not Change There are specific nouns that do not change their spelling at all when pluralized. Examples are given in the table below: Singular Plural moose moose fish fish sheep sheep shrimp shrimp aircraft aircraft deer deer Page 2 This worksheet is designed to help students practice and reinforce their understanding of irregular plural nouns. The worksheet presents a series of illustrations on the right side, each representing a noun. On the left side, there are corresponding plurals represented by letters A-L. Students are tasked with matching the correct plural form with the corresponding picture by writing the letter on the blank line provided below each illustration. By completing this exercise, students develop their ability to recognize and internalize the irregular forms of plural nouns. This interactive and visual approach to learning irregular plurals enhances students' comprehension and retention of these grammatical structures. It also reinforces their vocabulary skills as they connect words with visual representations. Free printable irregular plural noun worksheets!
